

Abstract

The present invention provides an advanced immunomagnetic method for the isolation of specific target cells from cell populations and suspensions of cell populations, especially tumor cells from peripheral blood bone, marrow aspirates, ascites and other body fluids. The invention also relates to a kit for performing the method for the isolation of specific target cells from body fluids.